[redacted] CIA, described the Land Armament and Manpower Model in terms of the data base, the interagency nature of the project, and the computer program. New methodologies were applied to the analysis of historical and current information and to projection assessments of the Soviet force development strategy. The focus of the project is on key issues (gaps) for collection guidance as well as an accurate data base. The program is being extended to address Soviet air and naval models, NATO forces, and to consider some Third World countries. [redacted] noted that this has been one of the Community's most successful efforts. NSA and Air Force, while not now involved, may benefit from participation in the project. [redacted]

6. Third World Data Base [redacted]

[redacted] provided some background on the development of the data base, both in the development of an integrated data base and the software to make the program easy to use. The data base uses a directory approach which provides flexibility and cross referencing for sources of data. Mr. Kerr advised the IPC that CIA is looking
